Please note: Paycheck contributions are based on semi-monthly pay periods. If you are paid on a bi-weekly basis, flat-rate deductions (such as medical, dental, and vision premiums) and flexible spending account contributions will be deducted in your first two paychecks each month. In months with a third pay date, your third paycheck will have no corresponding deductions.

Any employee who is unpaid for a period of time (including faculty who are off-contract), will have their premiums go into arrears. When they return to a paid status, regular deductions plus arrears will be taken; but will be no more than double deductions.

*A domestic partner is not recognized by the federal government as a qualified dependent. You may provide medical, dental, and vision coverage for domestic partners; however, under federal tax law, the portion of your premiums that is attributable to your domestic partner is not exempt from Social Security, Medicare, and FUTA taxes, or federal income tax. This means that if you cover a domestic partner, the following tax rules apply:

- You will incur state and federal taxes on the portion of the medical, dental, and vision premiums that is paid by Northeastern for your domestic partner's insurance. The value of these premiums is called imputed income.
- The portion of the premium paid by you for your domestic partner's coverage will be deducted from your salary as a post-tax benefit.
